About Us

Mitchell Builders began in New Zealand 1972 by Keith Mitchell (3rd generation) Carpenter Builder. Based in Whangarei from the beginning the company has specialized in very high quality construction of all manner of buildings including large and small homes, specialised renovations and commercial projects.

Mitchell Builders has been a family business for 4 generations. The company's origins began on the Norfolk - Suffolk borders, England in the early 1900's. The company still operates today from the same area in a small village called Pulham St Mary by Robert Mitchell (3rd generation) Master Mason. The type of projects undertaken has never changed; rebuilding and renovation of 16th century buildings, through to new homes, village halls and farm buildings.

Carpenter Builder and Managing Director John Mitchell (4th generation) now owns the company and continues to make sure the same skills and attention to detail are passed down to the next generation.

Mitchell Builders reputation for demanding very high standards from trades people and contractors alike are legendary. Staff are trained in house from apprentice carpenters through to master craftsmen builders. These very high standards are therefore passed on to their customers who appreciate these qualities and continue to use Mitchell Builders time and time again over the years. A significant part of our work has been undertaken by recommendation from previous customers, local, national and overseas architects, building supply companies and local authorities.
